About Noh theatre

Noh is a form of theater that originated in Japan in the 14th Century. There remain some 250 classical plays that were drawn from legend, history, and literature. The plays belong to five different categories (the categories vary slightly according to different sources, however, they are often labeled as: Deity, Warrior, Women, Ghost, and Demon). These plays are still staged today in the traditional style by all-male performers, with masks, period musical instruments, chorus, and elaborate costumes. Movement is slow, language is poetic, and the tone is solemn. Themes often relate to dreams, supernatural experiences, ghosts and spirits. It is identified as the oldest form of living-theater in the world.

A note from the playwright

Initially, I decided to adapt Japanese Noh plays out of an imaginary obligation to pay homage to the culture. Once I started writing, I couldn't help myself from messing with the source texts. I made up the mother character for the young warrior based on Atsumori (second category warrior play). Though I didn't like any of the third category women plays, I felt duty-bound (dammit!) to include at least one of them. So I chose the angel character from Hagoromo (Celestial Robe), but discarded the plot entirely. I cared little about who was who in Benkei Aboard Ship (fifth category demon play), but the dynamics between the warriors fascinated me; they became gangsters in the midst of intrigues and betrayals. I continued mixing stories, so characters based on different plays encountered each other. I've had a ball futzing with nine plays:

Seminaru by Zeami (1363–1433), 4th Category, Miscellaneous Crazy Woman Play

Atsumori by Zeami, 2nd Category, Warrior Play

Sumida River by Motomasa (1400–1432), 4th Category, Miscellaneous Crazy Woman Play

Yoroboshi, Author uncertain, either Zeami or Motomasa, 4th Category, Miscellaneous Madman Play

Hagoromo, Author unknown. Circa 1524. 3rd Category, Woman Play

Funabashi (Floating Bridge) by Zeami, 4th Category, Misc. Ghost Play

Aya no Tsuzumi (The Damask Drum), Author unknown, 4th Category, Miscellaneous Ghost Play

The Kamo Shrine, attributed to Zenchiku (c. 1405–1470), 1st Category, Deity Play

Funa Benkei (Benkei Aboard Ship), by Kanze Nobumitsu (1434–1516), 5th Category, Demon Play

There have been many drafts, readings, workshops, and a very different, beautiful production in San Francisco. For me, all of it has been fantastic, mingling with five or six great author/artistes from centuries ago. A magical actor named Paul Walker (1952–1993) told me that tragedy and comedy are essentially the same thing. It has taken me twenty years to truly understand what he meant. I wish Paul had lingered in life longer. He'd have loved to be HERE with me today.

This particular version of This Lingering Life, directed by Cat Miller (Paul would've loved her work) and produced by Cake Productions, is dedicated to my friend Paul's tragicomic spirit.

A note from the director

My stepdaughter, Nellie, has a unicorn coloring book. On each page is a unicorn from a different culture. There is one from Japan, one from India, one from the Netherlands, etc. Shortly after I began work on this play I was sitting at the kitchen table with her, coloring in it, when it suddenly struck me how both wonderful and strange it was that so many different cultures from so many different parts of the world should share such a specific creature in their mythology. What could explain that? The only thing I could come up with is that it must point to something that connects us—something deeper (and unfortunately more elusive) than culture, ethnicity, race, religion, gender, sexual orientation, nationality, or any of the other divisive categories we generally organize ourselves into.

By scattering nine ancient Japanese Noh plays into different eras and places, This Lingerin Life playfully reveals this fundamental universality and exposes our shared humanity in both its glory and its ugliness.

On the second page of her script, under the heading “characters,” Chiori writes, “The 28 characters in the play can be performed nicely by an ensemble of 8–10 actors; if you want to knock yourself out, by 28 actors. It can be done by any number of actors in-between. Age, race, gender-crossing casting highly recommended.”

You will find that there are 10 actors in this production. They play men, women, children, angels, demons, ghosts, and more, who lived, died, or hovered between these states over many thousands of years. You will notice that each actor’s roles do not necessarily align with his or her race or gender (although sometimes they do). This is not an attempt at color- or gender-blind casting (as if such a thing were even really possible). Instead it is an organized attempt to undercut expectation and pattern. Ours is a color- and gender-conscious casting designed to defy assumptions and hopefully begin to illuminate that which is the same under the very differences that it is impossible for us, as humans, not to see.

One of the most painful lessons I have ever had to learn is that people see and experience the world in fundamentally different ways. What other way can one explain war, genocide, hate? But we are connected, somehow, in this life or past ones, spiritually or genetically. Somehow. And that gives me hope. This play gives me hope. We all believe in unicorns after all. Let’s begin there.

Chiori Miyagawa

playwright

Chiori Miyagawa is a NYC-based playwright. This Lingerin Life received a world premiere production in San Francisco at Z Space, produced and directed by Jubilith Moore from Theatre of Yugen. Chiori’s other plays include I Have Been to Hiroshima Mon Amour (at Ohio Theater, produced by Voice & Vison Theater), Antigone Project (Women’s Project), America Dreaming (Vineyard Theater), Nothing Forever and Yesterday’s Window (New York Theatre Workshop) and others. She is happy to return to HERE with Cake Productions. Her last project at HERE was Dream Acts in 2012. She has been an artistic associate at New York Theater Workshop where she designed and managed the first phase of the fellowship program for playwrights of color, and an associate artist of JoAnne Akalaitis at the Public Theater. She is a recipient of many fellowships including a New York Foundation for the Arts Playwriting Fellowship, a McKnight Playwriting Fellowship, a Van Lier Playwriting Fellowship, an Asian Cultural Council Fellowship, a Rockefeller Bellagio Residency Fellowship in Italy, a MAP Fund from Creative Capital, and a Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study Fellowship at Harvard University. Twelve of her plays are collected in two books: Thousand Years Waiting and Other Plays (Seagull Books) and America Dreaming and Other Plays (NoPassport Press). She is a Usual Suspect of New York Theatre Workshop, an alumnus of New Dramatists (2006-2013), a playwright member of Lark Play Development Center, and a faculty member in Theater and Performance program at Bard College.

Special thanks to director/performer Jubilith Moore for her immense talent. To director David Herskovits for his significant contribution to the text. To Emily Morse (Artistic Director, New Dramatists), Amy Mueller (Artistic Director, Playwrights Foundation), Judith Vichniac (Associate Dean, Radcliffe Institute), Project Y Theater, Eugenie Chan, Emily Mendelson, Erik Ehn, and Hap Tivey for their artistic support. To directors Alice Reagan, and Sarah Cameron Sunde, and countless actors who participated in readings and workshops over the years for helping me complete the play. And to Amir Darvish and Cake Productions for the second life of the play.

ABOUT Cake PRODUCTIONS:

This female-founded theatre company produces Off-Off-Broadway pieces that are culturally significant to modern, urban audiences. Winner of the 2010 NY Innovative Theatre Award for Outstanding Featured Actor (Amir Darvish) and nominated for Outstanding Costume Design (Brooke Berry and Mark Mears), Cake Productions is geared towards commercially appealing, thought-provoking, edgy plays. In addition to creating opportunities for women as performers, administrators and designers, Cake focuses heavily on production values and presents their work in welcoming, accessible venues. The company also produces readings of potential new or adapted material for future mainstage productions and offers practical educational workshops for theater students and professionals.
